	a) Some months later, Andrew Morison, a financial manager at the college, was in the same room. He says, “It was about 11:45. Suddenly, I heard a knocking from beneath the window. There is no central heating there. I had already noticed how cold it was. I thought this was very strange because the fire was still burning in the fireplace.’ On another occasion, another waiter, Paul Cooke, noticed a wooden door in the room shaking violently. When at last he succeeded in opening it, there was no one on the other side. He interrupted a dinner to tell the college priest.
	b) Both men described the ghost as human-sized, but said it was impossible to see its face clearly or say whether it was a man or a woman. It travelled about 30 centimetres off the ground. In the dark room the ghost seemed very bright and both waiters felt suddenly cold. Mr Davies was not frightened but, at the same time, he did not want to get too close.
	c) Graham Ward says, ‘I saw the absolute terror on his face, so I don’t doubt something happened. All the people who have seen and heard these things are completely reliable men. He feels sure that there is a ghost in the college. What do you think?
	d) Cambridge University is one of the oldest universities in England. So, if you believe in ghosts, perhaps you would expect to see a ghost there. In 1997 there were several reports of a ghost at one of the Cambridge colleges. The college priest, Graham Ward, is certain that the college is haunted. This is his story. In April 1997, two waiters, Matthew Speller and Paul Davies, went into a room near the kitchen to get some plates. There are hundreds of famous ghost stories all around England. For example, in 1972, in a big household called Bramshill House in Hampshire, England, a security officer saw a man walking on the path outside. The officer, Mr William Chalk, said, "The man came in through the open door and went straight through the wall opposite. The back of my neck went cold and I hurried round the corner to see where he was, but he had simply disappeared! Later I found out that there used to be an archway there."
